FIFTH SUNDAY OF EASTER

We often think of love as an emotion. But Jesus tells us to love one another. That means that love is something we can train ourselves to do. So it is important to understand that love is not really an emotion. Emotions are feelings and reactions to what is happening around us. Love is a decision.

So love is being patient when that really annoying person is talking. It is being kind, even when someone is unkind to us. It means letting go of jealousy when someone else makes the basketball team and we did not. It means lifting people up instead of tearing them down. It means forgiving. And it means truly wanting what is best for the other person.

Loving can be really difficult. It often means sacrificing what we want for the good of another person. Jesus showed us this example. He sacrificed his life for us. Hopefully we will never need to die for another person, but sometimes we have to die to our own wants or our pettiness.

When Jesus says, “Love one another as I have loved you” he is telling us we are going to need to make some sacrifices for each other.
